The John Brown House Museum
I am going to the John Brown House Museum. It is about the families that lived in this home and how they contributed to Rhode Island and American history.

There are many things to see at the Museum and even some things I can touch and smell. There are rooms that I can walk in. Sometimes on rainy days the rooms can be a little dark. Visiting the Museum will be safe and fun.
Formal Front Parlor

This room is a space to entertain important guests like George Washington. I can see a fireplace, table and chairs, and can look at the patterns on the wallpaper and ceiling.

First, I walk into the parlor, then I can touch and smell the objects on the table next to the door.
The Dining Room

The dining room has lots of plates, cups, and candle holders that I can see on the table. This is where the family would eat their meals.
The Informal Parlor

Lots of activities took place in this room. I can see an old piano, a table to write letters, and a couch to read books.

First I can look at the room, then I can touch the objects under the window.
John and Sarah’s Bedroom

When I walk upstairs, I see a bedroom. There is a large bed and a fireplace. John and Sarah Brown would sleep in this room.

In the bedroom, there is a bathroom. If I want, I can walk into the bathroom and look at the nice bathtub, sink, and shower.
Large Bedchamber

This is another bedroom with a large bed. I can see lots of toys. The Brown family children played together in this room. There is a fireplace to keep them warm in the winter.
The Sick Room

This room was used when a person was sick. They would sleep in this bed to feel better. I can see toys like a doll bed and doll chairs for children to play with when they were sick.
Washington Wallpaper Room

In this large room, I can see the wallpaper with George Washington on it. He was the first president of the United States. I can look at the objects in the glass cases.
The Butler’s Pantry

This room is called the Butler’s Pantry. The family stored their dinnerware in these cabinets. I can look at interesting objects like a copper sink and a water buffalo head that holds soup.

When I am done, I can walk into the bookshop.
The Sally Gallery

After the bookshop, I can walk into the next room. This exhibit is about the Sally slave ship. I can read the signs and look at the pictures and objects in the glass case.
The Carriage Room

This room has a large carriage that John Brown owned. I can sit on the chairs and look at the carriage.
